GEORGE SWAGART, 86, LOCATES LONG LOST GRAVE

Find Resting Place of First White Child Buried in Clinton

Body of Riley Dexter Buried In Bengal Township 98 Years Ago

George Swagart, bowed under the weight of 86 years, but with a memory clearly recording the scenes of his boyhood of 70 years ago, pointed out with his cane, to a group of Ionia, St. Johns and Bengal residents, Sunday morning, the last resting place of Riley Dexter, a grave made 98 years ago.

This incident took place on the farm of Fred Mohnke in South Bengal. It was at this point in 1833 that a band of colonists who settled Ionia stopped, half-starved, nearly exhausted and discouraged, and buried little Riley Dexter, one of the children of Judge Dexter. B. O. Williams of Shiawassee and the young Indian, Mackatepenace (Blackbird), son of the Saginaw chief, who were guiding the party across the uncharted area, stood in the background while the grief-stricken Dexter lifted his face to

An interesting sidelight of the Dexter colony lies in the fact that the child, Riley Dexter, was a first cousin of Mrs. William Jennings Bryan, Mrs. Bryan being the daughter of Judge Dexter's brother. The grandmother of both, Judge Dexter's mother, was a member of the colony which crossed Clinton on their way to Ionia in May, 1833.

Heaven in the gathering gloom and prayed to God to care for the soul of his little son.

Two years hence, in 1933, the city of Ionia plans a centennial. Mrs. L. P. Brock of that city, a local historian, headed the Ionia party, consisting of Editor and Mrs. Fred Kiester, who came to St. Johns Sunday morning for the express purpose of locating the grave of the Dexter child. Mr. Swagart is the only living person who remembers its location. When a boy he worked on this farm which was a part of the section of land owned by Judge Courtland Hill, one of the first settlers in Bengal. "They used to keep a fence around the spot," said Mr. Swagart. "I remember it well—right here by the bank of the creek and just off the road which those pioneers cut through the woods."

The story of the trip of Judge Dexter and his colony is one of the most interesting of this section. Mr. Williams, who guided them to the Indian village on the Looking Glass and who enlisted the services of the Indian, Mackatepenace, left the following account of the trip and burial of the Dexter child:

"Having in vain tried to get Beaubien to pilot them, Messrs. Dexter, Yeomans and Wisnor came to us for help. I left our planting, taking my blankets and a small tent, and in six days landed them at Ionia looking out the route and directing where the road was to be. (The road was cut through heavy timber.)

"This was the first real colonizing party we had ever seen, myself never having been further west than Dewitt (the Indian village). I there induced Mackatepenace (Blackbird), son of Kishkako, the chief of all the Saginaws, to pilot us past Muskrat creek, and from there I proceeded with the party. At that point a child of Mr. and Mrs. Dexter, a son of two years, died of scarlet fever.

"We buried the child by torch and candle light in a box improvised by the party. The road we opened was next year followed by other emigrants and was substantially the Grand River road through Shiawassee and Clinton counties, and was travelled for many years after."

Harriet, a daughter of Joel Guild, head of one of the families in the Dexter party, was 20 years of age at the time of this pilgrimage. In a history of Grand Rapids where she later lived, this lady left an even more graphic account of the sickness, death and burial of the child:

"It was raining when we reached the Looking Glass river and that night the boy was so sick that we sat up all night holding umbrellas over him.

"The next day we soon entered a heavy timbered land (Riley Twp.).

That night the boy grew worse and his mother and I sat up nearly all night with him.

"Our provisions were nearly gone and we could not stop, but about noon Mrs. Dexter called a halt, noticing a change in the child. In a few minutes the little sufferer was dead. We could not tarry but we went sadly on and camped early. My mother furnished a small trunk used for carrying food and dishes, which served for a coffin. By Muskrat creek as the sun was going down, the little one was buried.

"A large elm by the grave was marked. Logs were put over the mound and fastened there to protect it from wolves that were plenty in that vicinity. The only service over the grave was a prayer by Mr. Dexter. The mother seemed broken-hearted and all were grieved but we could not tarry there.

"We had reached the point where we had to use meal father bought at Pontiac for the horses. We let the horses pick their living as best they could from grass and twigs along the way. (These colonists had with them some 20 cows.) We made log heap fires, filled a large brass kettle with water, placed it on the fire, stirred in the meal and made hasty pudding. This, with the milk from the cows was our only food."

Starting just a few rods southeast of the point where Mr. Swagart located the grave, is the beginning of an angling road which continues several miles in a north-westerly direction. It is now a highway but was the original Dexter Road cut through the timber by Judge Dexter and his party of colonists. The road passes about two miles south of the village of Fowler and is now a good gravel road.

Another account of the scene at the burial of the Dexter child by one of the party reads, "Never shall

I forget that scene. The whole family, if not all others, were in tears. The gray-haired sire (he was 46 years of age) after visiting the heads of other families to lead the exercises of the mournful occasion, with tears streaming down his cheeks, read a burial service amid the sobs that nearly drowned his voice in that deep, dark and gloomy forest—the gloomiest spot of the whole route. The grave was made and can still be seen on the farm of Judge Hill on the bank of Muskrat creek." (Judge Courtland Hill was the grandfather of Tyler Hill and was at one time probate judge of Clinton county.)

FIRES BUILDINGS, ENDS OWN LIFE

CHARRED BODY OF CHAS. DRISKILL FOUND IN BARN EMBERS

Insane Youth Destroys Home of Parents in Olive May 18; Inquest Held

What the workings of a disordered mind may bring forth was tragically revealed Saturday afternoon, May 18, when Charles C. Driskill, 22-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Driskill of Olive township, fired his parents' farm home and buildings and then ended his own life with a rifle bullet. The charred remains of the unfortunate young man's body were found in the ruins of the Driskill barn which, like all other buildings on the place, was burned to the ground.

Last summer, after he had been working in Pontiac for a short while, Charles Driskill was committed to the Pontiac State Hospital where an examination proved him to be mentally unbalanced. Three months later, on October 17, 1928, he was allowed to leave the institution and returned to his parents' home four miles south of St. Johns. Testimony given at coroner's inquest Monday by members of his family showed that at first his mind seemed disordered but that recently he had appeared rational and there was little warning that he might commit such a deed as that which shocked the whole community Saturday.

Shortly before 2 p. m. on that day Mr. and Mrs. Asa Driskill drove to St. Johns to do some shopping. Charles remained at home where he had been helping his father shingle the chicken house in the morning. At 2:15 p. m. Forest Smith, who lives just a short distance west of the Driskill place, discovered that the house was on fire. He ran to the scene where he was joined by another neighbor, Leon Ormes. They entered the front door and Forest called "Charles," but received no answer. Thinking that the young man had gone to town Forest and Mr. Ormes, aided by many others who had been attracted by the fire, succeeded in saving most of the household goods on the first floor.

In the meantime the barn, tool shed and chicken house were burning with nearly all contents. It became known that Charles had not left the place with his parents and a search for him, or his remains, was started. The body, burned beyond recognition, was finally found on a pile of burning hay in the ruins of the barn. After it had been removed the barrel of his father's 32-caliber rifle containing an exploded shell, was discovered near the spot on which the body was found.

In all probability as soon as his parents had driven to town young Driskill set fire to the house, then the tool shed and chicken house and finally the barn, after which he shot himself with the rifle. Before firing the barn he turned out the horses that were in their stalls when Mr. Driskill left home. It is reported that the youth had put the well out of commission so that there would be no water with which to fight the flames.

When the body was found officers were notified and Coroner C. E. Lamb impaneled the following as a coroner's jury for the inquest which was held at the courthouse in St. Johns, Monday morning: Fred and Lee VanVleet, Arthur Gage, Burr Eaton, Ed Magner and Floyd Taber.

Asa Driskill, father of the unfortunate youth, was the first witness called by Prosecutor G. G. Hunter, who conducted the hearing in the presence of Coroner Lamb. Mr. Driskill said that his boy was in good health and in a rational state of mind Saturday morning and at the time Mr. and Mrs. Driskill drove to St. Johns Saturday afternoon. He said Charles enlisted in the U. S. Army in December, 1927, at Tulsa, Oklahoma, and was stationed at a Texas army post. Three weeks later the boy left the service, writing his parents that he "didn't like it" and telling them he was using an assumed name. Through letters, Mr. Driskill later learned that his boy spent some time in southern states and then came back to Michigan and worked in Pontiac where he was committed to the hospital as related above. Mr. Driskill stated that the boy never wanted to be crossed in any way and about 10 days before ending his own life told his father, in a fit of rage over some small matter, "I would like to dope you to death or kill you." Neither Mr. Driskill or any of the other witnesses knew of any trouble the boy had had with neighbors or acquaintances or his own family.

Others who took the stand at the inquest were Leon Ormes, John Sonier, Ernest Rall and Forest Smith, all of whom arrived early at the fire; Mrs. Howard Walker, sister of the deceased, and Deputy Sheriff Percy Patterson, who told of inspecting the rifle with its exploded shell.

After deliberating briefly the coroner's jury found that Charles Driskill came to his death by his own hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Driskill are living with a neighbor temporarily and have not made definite future plans. The loss of their buildings is partially covered by insurance.

A report that the Driskill boy was in state prison last summer instead of at the Pontiac hospital is false. The records show he was at Pontiac.

Charles Clinton Driskill, son of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Driskill of Olive township, was born May 19, 1907, near Hillsboro, Clinton county, Ohio.

His early life was spent in Ohio and Indiana.

About ten years ago he came with his parents and sister from near Grover Hill, Ohio, to Olive township, Clinton county, Michigan. He attended school at the Merrihew school and went two years to the St. Johns high school.

He passed from this life May 18, 1929, just one day before his twenty-second birthday. Besides his parents he is survived by one sister, Mrs. Howard D. Walker of St. Johns, and many relatives and friends in Ohio and Indiana.

The funeral was held Tuesday p. m. at 1:30 at Ebert's and 2:00 o'clock at the West Bingham U. B. church, Rev. Montgomery officiating. Burial at the West Bingham cemetery.
